Mr. Carey, who was 85, died Monday after a short illness at his home in the 13800 block Mantua Mill road in Glyndon.

He retired from the CIA in 1962 after serving with it since it was formed at the end of World War II and winning its highest decoration, the Distinguished Intelligence Medal.

During the war, he served as an intelligence officer in the Army Air Corps, reaching the rank of colonel. He was awarded the Legion of Merit for his work arranging for United States airfields in North Africa and South America.

Earlier, he had become friendly with Emperor Haile Selassie of Ethiopia before he ascended the throne and had travelled through that country and others, including New Guinea, Indochina, India, Australia and New Zealand as a big game hunter.

During the 1920s he hunted for exotic animals for the collections of the New York Museum of Natural History and the Field Museum of Natural History in Chicago.

He was a member of the Sons and Crockett Club, an organization of record-holding big game hunters.

A native of Baltimore who was raised in Riderwood, he was a graduate of the Marston School and attended the Johns Hopkins University.

He ended his college education to go to Canada and serve in the British Royal Flying Corps during World War I.

After the war, he worked in real estate and investment banking in addition to his travels and became an adviser to hunters for a travel agency.

The senior member of the Maryland Club, he was a former president of the English Speaking Union and served on the vestry of St. John's Church.

He also served as master of fox hounds for the Green Spring Hunt and in the 1930s was secretary of the Grand National Point to Point and Churchville Cup races.

His wife, the former Margaret Elliott Hambleton, died in 1973.

He is survived by a son, George Gibson Carey IV, of Cincinnati; two stepsons, John A. Hambleton, a retired Air Force colonel of Fort Walton beach, Fla., and George B. E. Hambleton, of Oldwick, N.J.; two sisters, Constance C. Owings and Zoe C. Greene, both of Riderwood, and 10 grandchildren.
